

Votescam: The Stealing of America

In 2016, Donald Trump won the presidency despite losing the popular vote by nearly 3 million votes. Many people believe that Trump's victory was the result of widespread voter fraud. However, there is no evidence to support this claim. In fact, a study by the Brennan Center for Justice found that there were only 31 credible instances of voter fraud out of over 1 billion votes cast in the 2016 election.

Despite the lack of evidence, the myth of voter fraud persists. This myth is often used to justify voter suppression laws that make it more difficult for people to vote. These laws disproportionately affect minority voters and low-income voters, who are more likely to vote for Democratic candidates.

The myth of voter fraud is a dangerous one. It undermines the integrity of our democracy and makes it more difficult for people to participate in the political process. It is important to debunk this myth and to fight for laws that make it easier for people to vote.

The Evidence of Voter Fraud

There is no credible evidence to support the claim that widespread voter fraud is a problem in the United States. A study by the Brennan Center for Justice found that there were only 31 credible instances of voter fraud out of over 1 billion votes cast in the 2016 election. This is a rate of 0.000003%.

The vast majority of alleged cases of voter fraud are either hoaxes or misinterpretations of the law. For example, in 2016, a woman in North Carolina was accused of voting twice. However, it was later discovered that she had only voted once and that the second vote had been cast by her dead husband.

The myth of voter fraud is often used to justify voter suppression laws that make it more difficult for people to vote. These laws disproportionately affect minority voters and low-income voters, who are more likely to vote for Democratic candidates.

The Impact of Voter Fraud

Voter fraud has a negative impact on our democracy. It undermines the integrity of our elections and makes it more difficult for people to participate in the political process. It also leads to the passage of voter suppression laws that make it more difficult for people to vote.

The myth of voter fraud is a dangerous one. It is important to debunk this myth and to fight for laws that make it easier for people to vote.

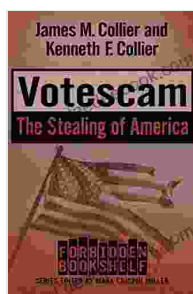

What Can We Do?

There are a number of things that we can all do to help combat voter fraud and protect the integrity of our democracy.

- Educate ourselves about voter fraud. The first step to combating voter fraud is to educate ourselves about the issue. We need to understand the different types of voter fraud, how it is carried out, and the impact it has on our democracy.
- Challenge false claims of voter fraud. When we hear someone making false claims about voter fraud, we need to challenge them. We can do this by providing them with accurate information about the issue. We can also point them to reputable sources of information about voter fraud.

- Support organizations that are working to combat voter fraud.
There are a number of organizations that are working to combat voter fraud. We can support these organizations by donating money, volunteering our time, and spreading the word about their work.
- Vote! The best way to protect the integrity of our democracy is to vote. When we vote, we are sending a message that we care about our country and that we want our voices to be heard.

By taking these steps, we can all help to combat voter fraud and protect the integrity of our democracy.
